"The game is still an amazing piece of work, but the PC version is not as fun as it should be, and I'm tired of being stifled by the menu system and the clunky camera. I feel this game would have been great on an Xbox. Unfortunately, it's turned into a PC game with PC intentions instead." On October 7, 2008, Kotaku reported that Saint's Row 2 would receive a patch on November 12, 2008. The patch, a free upgrade for existing owners, would add a number of new features including a "2X" speed mode to play the game in "double speed". A "split screen" mode, that allows two people to play the game at once, was introduced. This was later removed in the PlayStation 3 version. The patch was available on November 12, 2008 as a free download to existing PC owners. Reception Critical response The PC version received "average" reviews, while the PlayStation 3 version received "generally favorable" reviews, according to the review aggregation website Metacritic. The PC version sold approximately two million copies in North America. The PC version was praised for its open-ended nature and addictive gameplay, with critics noting that the game would have been better suited on a console. The reviewers enjoyed the graphics and the physics. Both the 2.0 and the Steam versions were criticized for their numerous bugs and problems, such as menus hanging on the screen. In contrast, the PlayStation 3 version received "generally favorable" reviews, but also reported a number of bugs and some interface issues. The game was praised for its gameplay and graphics. GameSpy listed Saint's Row 2 as the PC game of the year for 2008. Accolades In 2008, Saint's Row 2 won the BAFTA Games Award for "Best Studio/Publisher. The game was awarded "Favorite Game of the Year" by IGN, "Best Xbox 360 Game" by GameSpy, and "Best British Game" by Eurogamer. The game was nominated for "Best Game" by GameSpot and for "Game, Original Full Motion Video" by the Academy of Interactive Arts & Sciences. Sales In the United States, the PlayStation 3 version of Saint's Row 2 was the 12th-best-selling game of November 2008, with sales of 102,846 copies. It reached number one in August 2009, before falling to number four in November. In its first two 82157476af
